

International Remote Work – Virtue or Villain?

Speakers:

Gabriel Ho, Director, People Services, KPMG China

Isabel Liu, Director, People Services, KPMG China

Murray Sarelius, National Head of People Services, KPMG China

International Remote Work – Flight suspensions, increasing needs, what's next?

Flight suspensions and the increasing need (or desire) to travel despite quarantine restrictions have caused many employees to consider working from overseas. Whether these requests arise from disrupted travel plans, or a desire to visit family abroad, employers are facing many complex issues that accompany such requests. There are many different views and approaches to international remote work - is it a risky endeavour and a distraction, a necessary evil, or a boon for talent acquisition and retention? Whatever your opinion of remote work, organisations and employers in Hong Kong are facing numerous cases where the risks need to be managed.

Join us for a panel discussion where experts from KPMG will provide updates on immigration, tax and other related issues that arise from international remote work and the thought process that employers need to go through to address these challenges.

About the speakers

Gabriel is a Director in KPMG Hong Kong. With over 12 years of experience on global mobility, rewards and international tax matters, he works with a number of large Hong Kong-based organisations with regional and international operations. He is well versed in employment and individual tax matters in the region. He also works extensively with private and public companies, and private equity firms to help them design and implement employee share ownership plans, co-investment arrangements, profit sharing arrangements and carried interest arrangements.

Isabel is a Director in KPMG Hong Kong. She specializes in providing Hong Kong and PRC individual income taxation services to local and multinational companies. Having worked in Hong Kong and Shenzhen in both professional and commercial capacities, she has extensive experience in helping companies to structure and implement pragmatic solutions for complex mobility initiatives while ensuring tax compliance.

Murray is a Partner and leads KPMG's Hong Kong and

China People Services' teams. Murray has over 25 years' experience with international aspects of personal and corporate tax planning. He works extensively with businesses that are operating or investing internationally. For international businesses, his focus is on helping them to manage the expatriate and employer tax issues associated with an internationally mobile workforce, including international executive remuneration, employee share schemes and international tax planning for employment and investment.
